Doctoral Studies in Environmental and Sustainability Education: contextualising the process

@ Homerton College, Cambridge, UK

August 2-5, 2016

*Environmental and Sustainability Education Research Network 30 of European Conference on Educational Research (ECER) of the European Educational Research Association (EERA)

This opening school in a series of seasonal schools planned by Network 30 (Environmental and Sustainability Education Research) of the European Conference on Educational Research will take place in August 2016 at Homerton College, Cambridge and is now open for expressions of interest. If you are a current PhD or EdD student, a student who has recently completed a masters and is looking to start doctoral studies or you have completed your doctorate in the past 2 years, we invite you to take up this opportunity to participate in this event where you will be able to meet up-and-coming and established researchers who will debate and discuss with you the onto-epistemic framings and methodological challenges you are likely to face on your research journey into this field.

This event will combine interactive workshops, seminars, symposia, writing workshops and student presentations in a programme drawing on the expertise from within the network, from Homerton College, and the University of Cambridge. To participate please send an expression of interest to Elsa Lee (eul20@cam.ac.uk) as soon as possible. This should include a 200 word description of your current research, what stage you are at in your doctoral studies and what you hope to get out of the course. Deadline for EOI: March 4th.

The cost of the course is currently estimated at £360 (GBP Sterling) for students from high GDP countries and £150 for students from low GDP countries. Besides the programme itself, this cost includes accommodation for 3 nights*, and food and refreshments for the duration of the course and some cultural activity*

*Students may purchase extra nights separately through the Homerton Conference system.
