

History of Education Society Annual Conference 2012

Rulers, Rebels & Reformers

November 30th–December 2nd at Winchester Hotel, Hampshire

Winchester has been associated with education since King Alfred promoted learning as part of his reforms as King of England ruling from Wessex. This conference addresses the familiar theme of the 'Three Rs', here revised as Rulers, Rebels and Reformers, each in their own way central to understanding drivers for change in formal and informal education. Papers are invited which must have a historical perspective and reflect the theme of the conference ideally within one or more of the following strands:

- Education, social and political reform
- Education and the city and/or the citizen
- Education, religion, piety and spirituality
- Education, nation and the transnational
- Educative places, spaces and heterotopias
- Education, gender, sexuality and difference
- Objects of desire, education, the material and the visual
- Reforming, ruling or rebelling? Schools, colleges and university histories
